This gritty and poignant tale of an orphan's struggle against poverty and crime in the underbelly of London shocked and moved readers. It was a stark departure from the lightheartedness of Pickwick, showcasing Dickens's capacity for social critique and his ability to elicit profound empathy for the downtrodden. Many consider * Great Expectations * to be one of his most perfectly constructed novels. * Our Mutual Friend * (1865) is Dickens's last completed novel, a sprawling and complex work that examines the corrupting influence of money and the illusions of social mobility in Victorian England. It features a vast cast of characters, from the mysterious Silas Wegg to the romantic Lizzie Hexam, and is notable for its intricate plot and its dark, often satirical, portrayal of society. The Mystery of Edwin Drood (unfinished, 1870) remains one of literature's great unfinished puzzles. Dickens died before completing this novel, leaving readers to speculate about the fate of Edwin Drood and the motivations of the enigmatic John Jasper.
